14. a)	Alex is a very gifted young man; he is warm and loyal and he wants to feel trusted and valued. He puts a lot of pressure on him, he wants to set the tone, to be the best at work, to be the best at home, he enjoys supporting his loved ones and his friends, he wants to see everybody happy. Meanwhile he is very hard on himself, he wants to learn new things, to develop himself in many areas, from foreign languages to nutrition and sports and technical skills necessary at work. This creates stress. He realizes that at the end of the day he walks through many things but nothing really that matters. He is also upset about his daily activities, the strange need to procrastinate...the lack of focus...He tried even the Pomodoro algorithm that requires to stay concentrate on one activity during 25 minutes and then to have a 5 minutes break, without success. He confesses it is easier to refuse someone who wants to interrupt him during the 25 minutes continuous activity but he can't control himself; he breaks the rule himself for easier and more enjoyable tasks like reading the mail or watching TV for the news. In the end, he gets the task done but later and with a great taste of dissatisfaction. What suggestions would you give Alex to help improve his situation?	4 4 4 10,12
